Industry, Labor Turn Politics And Laws Topsy-Turvy In Lansing

INDUSTRY AND LABOR have turned politics and laws topsy-turvy in Lansing.

Republicans increased weekly benefits to idle workers from $42 to $54 maximum, keeping the $50 maximum for single men. Gov. Williams signed the bill but didn't like it.

Williams said Democratic plans would have given workers—all workers—50 per cent of their regular earnings during idle periods. Republicans say their plan already does that.

Realists and those with adding machines say both are right, except that Williams is referring to take-home pay and Republicans to gross wages.

Republicans say the benefit increase gives Michigan the "best unemployment compensation law in any industrial state," Williams calls it "pitiful" and says the average boost is 71 cents.

That part of the argument is natural.

Labor and management in Detroit, by negotiating modified guaranteed annual wage settlements at General Motors and Ford, set new scenery for attitudes.

The new contracts allow idle employees to collect state unemployment benefits, then the companies add in a percentage to give the idle worker a certain percentage of his weekly wage.

There is a need for legislation to erase the ban against recipients of unemployment compensation from otherwise receiving income while idle. Republicans are in favor of the changes.

Williams hinted at the possibility of Republicans raising benefits next year, so the proportionate value of the industries will be less.

when the benefit claims come in. Williams, always in favor of higher benefits, said he might be joined by Republicans in the legislature who, he claims, have ignored his appeals for increases.

"It will demonstrate again the tender regard of the Republican party for big business," he said.

The fortunate participants in the controversy are the workers. Whatever happens now, they will benefit under any version of the plan—and most workers vote on election day.

RESORT AREAS DEPENDING upon tourists in all seasons of the year for their existence had some welcome news this week.

The Michigan Tourist Council told legislators it would use the full $44,000 increase in its 1956-57 budget for advertising and promotional activities.

Ralph W. Budd, president of Great Lake Greyhound Lines and three-time chairman of the council, said:

"We want to assure the legislature the money will be spent as we promised when the increase was granted."

While working on the general summer tourist season at the normal concentration, the council said it would work toward extending the season in the early spring and late summer.

Another idea will be to concentrate more on winter sport areas, to make Michigan a year-round vacation area.

MICHIGAN STATE COLLEGE is now Michigan State University but the change still is making. The legislature changed the name effective July 1 to give the first agricultural college in the nation the stature M S U has.

Crawford County Avalanché
Thursday, July 21, 1955

ed in its 100 years.

Dr. John A. Harnish, president of the new university, has ordered that stationery supplies, cafeteria dishes and other items bearing the old name be used up before the new-name replacements are requisitioned.

The Alma Mater and the Spartan Fight Song has been changed to rhyme and still carry the university designation.

Otherwise, there was no celebration along the banks of the Red Cedar when the change became official.

"We've long been a university and there's little cause for celebration at getting what we deserve," said one student.

AUD. GEN. VICTOR TARGONSKI just received an unprecedented grant of legal power.

Atty. Gen. Thomas M. Kavanagh ruled that Targonski could be liable for the county land tax sale if the treasurer failed to make the bidding competitive and sell each parcel separately.

Without pointing a finger, Targonski hinted broadly that some treasurers were selling large parcels of land to friends without competitive bidding.

Kavanagh also ruled that if a tax sale were cancelled, the land would revert to the state, the treasurer and his bondsman would be liable for the cost of re-advertising the subsequent sale and for the interest which the state lost by the delay.

As a crowning opinion, Kavanagh said if treasurers failed to follow the letter of the tax sale law, a petition would be started for their removal.

Ottawa Indian Pageant Slated This Weekend

An entirely new program has been scheduled for this year's Ottawa Indian Pageant and Naming Ceremony in Harbor Springs.

The pageant presentations on Friday and Saturday evenings, July 22 and 23, will feature a three-part program. Highlight of the presentation will be a half-hour show by the aerial "Antalaks"—five-man acrobatic team recently featured on a nationally televised show, and former member of the Ringling Brothers Circus.

Second part of the program will include new colorful Indian dances presented by the Hoeka Waepa Group of Detroit, whose authentic interpretations of tribal rites have been featured at many Big Ten football game half-time shows.

Final part of the program will include a brief pageant depicting the history of the Ottawa Indian in the Harbor Spring area. This pageant will be a background for the traditional Naming Ceremony when several nationally-known business, military, and professional leaders will be inducted as honorary chiefs in the Ottawa tribe.

The annual Indian parade has been scheduled for Friday afternoon 3:00 o'clock and will include units of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, whose ship will be docked at Harbor Springs for the week end.

Above is a map showing the property along the South Branch of the AuSable river which the late George Mason willed to the Department of Conservation. One of the stipulations in the will was that the property be maintained in its present wild state. Another was that a chapel be built somewhere along the 14 mile stretch. Conservation officials Jack Mason, son of the donor, and Mark Stevens, executor of the will, made a tour a few weeks ago of the property to select a site for the chapel.

ACROSS THE DESK

From the Wildwood Independent, Record, Wildwood, N. J.: Remember the prices that obtained back in 1925?

You could get a new small car for $500. You could get a good cigar for a nickel. And you could buy a reliable watch for one dollar.

Those days are gone, no doubt forever. But there are a few very few commodities in general use which still sell at around the 1925 price.

Gasoline, the oil industry's principal product, is one of them. Exclusive of the taxes, over which the industry has no control, and which are up 250 per cent, gasoline now costs only slightly more than it did in 1925. And, measure by the barometer of performance, it costs substantially less—for two gallons of today's motor fuel do the work that required three in an earlier era.

Various forces have helped to bring this about. For one, consumption is far greater, and the more we use of anything, generally speaking, the cheaper the price. For another, the oil industry has always been a leader in scientific research designed to produce new products, better products, and lower-priced products. And for still another, intense competition is a hallmark of the oil industry—in refining, selling and every other phase of operation. Very likely that has been the greatest of all the forces. In any line of endeavor, competition is the consumer's best friend.

From the Harvard Herald, Harvard, Illinois: Recently the word spread in Livingston, Mont., that mountain lions had been spotted on a nearby ranch. The chase was on and before the hunt was over two large cats had been traced and shot. One measured seven feet and weighed 125 pounds and the other was seven feet six inches and weighed 145 pounds.

The interesting part about these native lions is that they always head for the false security of a tree when the hounds are after them, thus assuring their ultimate destruction. They cannot reason that immediate security is not always the best—that the only escape from the tree is down, into a trap of their own setting.

Sometimes we people reason as poorly. We encourage inflated government spending and public debt to get some easy money, thereby setting a tax trap for ourselves just as the lion made the fatal mistake of climbing a tree for temporary relief.

More than one people has been trapped into bankruptcy by the baying of public spenders.

FREAK WIND CAUSES DAMAGE AT CAMP

A freak wind, which was really a miniature tornado hit Camp Grayling one afternoon last week. Observed by several, it struck the area where the 113th Medical Battalion is stationed.

The whirling mass of air ripped up a squad tent which it demolished and took the helmet and shirt of Fifth Army Instructor, Sgt. Brandis for a ride. The helmet hovered about 30 feet up in the air, the Sergeant said, but was recovered. He failed to find his shirt, however. No one was injured.
